

MERCHANTS HAVE INTERESTING MEET

There was a short but interesting meeting of the Daly City Merchants' Association held last Wednesday evening at the City Hall Auditorium, with President R. T. McHale in the chair.

There was a report made of the joint Christmas party given for the children of Daly City by the Daly City Theatre and the Merchants' Association, Saturday afternoon, December 3. The management of the Daly City Theatre gave a free show for the kiddies on that occasion, and the Merchants furnished the candy. Santa Claus was in attendance and the theatre was packed to the doors by hundreds of happy children. It was a very happy occasion and a beautiful sight to behold.

The management of the Daly City Theatre is to be complimented and thanked for this kindly remembrance of the children, as is likewise the Daly City Merchants' Association, and other friends who have gladdened the hearts of the youngsters from time to time. Our children are fortunate in having good friends. It was suggested that this be made an annual affair.

The proposition to build an addition to the City Hall was discussed, and most of the members present expressed themselves in favor of it. In this connection it was suggested that a social hall might be added to the rear of the building, or in the basement, where organizations such as the Merchants' Association might serve refreshments after their meetings.

An effort will be made to secure a better attendance of the members, and more interest in civic affairs.

President R. T. McHale announced that a printed list of the standing committees for the ensuing year will be ready at the next regular meeting. All merchants, business and professional men are welcome, and are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

The next regular meeting will be held at the City Hall Auditorium on the first Wednesday evening in February.

W. H. CLAY, Secretary.

SPECIAL ELECTION
CALLED BY BOARD

At the request of the registered unemployed of Daly City, who have recently organized, a special meeting was held Wednesday evening by the City Council and a special election called for Saturday, January 27, for the purpose of re-submitting to the voters of Daly City Proposition No. 3, which was defeated at the December 19 election.

Notice of the election, covering precincts and election officers and stating the proposition to be voted on, will be found elsewhere in this issue.

SURPRISE BRIDAL SHOWER

The table was prettily decorated in Christmas colors. In the center stood a miniature Christmas tree.

Mr. Lewis Hampton, of San Francisco, acted as toastmaster. Games were played during the evening. Mr. George Olmo, of San Francisco, rendered many popular songs.

BOARD APPROVES COUNT OF BALLOTS IN WATER ELECTION

Supervisors of San Mateo county, meeting in Redwood City last Friday, officially approved the count of ballots cast in this county at the Central Valley water election, December 29. Following approval of the ballot count the board adjourned to meet last Tuesday for the first session of the new year.

YEAR OF PROGRESS
FOR LOCAL LEGION

As we start the new year, we pause long enough to review some of the achievements of 1933.

Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, started the year 1933 with 100 per cent of its membership quota, the first Post in San Mateo county to do so. A class of new members were initiated at Colma Community Center, January 27, by the drill team of Richmond Post No. 10. The Hard time party held in Eagles Hall, January 28, was one of the best of the season. Our colors were in the Golden Gate bridge dedication ceremonies. We bought our club house March 27, and held the first meeting in it April 12. Our colors were in the parade for National Commander Johnson, in San Francisco, May 23. Comrade R. L. Crane was nominated for Eighth District Commander, and was unanimously elected July 28. A dance for the benefit of the unemployed was held in the Daly City Auditorium. The officers for 1934 were installed September 27. Comrade L. M. Hill was appointed publicity chairman for the Eighth District. A flag-pole was donated to the Post by Mr. A. Bodien, November 8. The Post made its membership quota for November. A joint Christmas tree for the children with the Unit, December 20.

The San Mateo County Council will meet at Half Moon Bay, on Sunday, January 7. A parade will be held at 11 A. M. Department Commander Homer Chaillaux and other department officers will be present.

January is legislative month in the program of the American Legion. All ex-service men are urged to support the "Four Point Program" adopted by the 1933 national convention in Chicago:

1. That no veteran disabled in line of duty suffers any reduction of those benefits granted such veterans in the World War Veterans' Act as in effect prior to March 20, 1933.

2. That hospitalization under federal government auspices be afforded all veterans not dishonorably discharged who require hospital treatment and who are not able to reasonably pay for their own treatment.

3. That perpetuation of service connection for all veterans properly granted such service connection, under laws in existence prior to March 20, 1933, be recommended as an item of Legion policy.

4. That the benefits provided for dependents of veterans as established in the World War Veterans' Act be resumed and maintained as the government's policy, and that in no event shall widows and dependent children of deceased World War veterans be without government protection.

"Continue to serve. Join the American Legion."

A NEW YEAR'S WISH
FOR THE YEAR 1934

May those who have helped us through the past depression by their kind advice and financial aid live long and happy. May we have the sense of appreciation for their kindness to us who needed them.

May we never forget our benefactors.

May we all profit in a spiritual way through our losses. And may we never again have to pass through an ordeal of want and sorrow.

God bless the President of our United States and may he be given strength and courage and vision to foresee what is best for the future of our beloved country.

Let us be loyal to the faith that he has asked for and may this grand nation of our be an example of the belief in our Heavenly Father, who has guided him who asked His help during this serious crisis.

May those who feel doubtful be given more faith that they may understand. And may this year be a year of great good to our fellow man. And may this grand country in its government be an example of achievement for good to the nations of the world.

LILLIAN G. LANDINI.

Stebenne Granted Parole

A. J. Stebenne, Redwood City attorney, was paroled from the San Mateo county jail at Redwood City last Monday by Superior Judge Maxwell McNutt as a New Year's gift. He has served nine months on a charge of grand theft. Stebenne was placed on probation for five years, and warned not to practise law during that time.

A petition signed by 1,000 church members demands that the Santa Clara county grand jury "clean house" among county officials because of the recent lynchings in San Jose, and the conduct of the Lamson and Templeton slaying trials.

WE ARE LAGGING FAR BEHIND

By J. W. MARCHBANK

In the good times coming in this country broad-minded legislators can be depended upon to do the right thing. In California the lawmakers, who are to assemble at Sacramento next January, will be called on to make necessary changes in the statute governing horse racing in the state. The most urgent of the improvements experience has amply shown to be imperative is the reduction of the percentage abstracted from the pari mutuel pools.

Nine per cent, instead of twelve, as the "take", will put the home game on a par with the greatest in the world, simply because of the broad basis furnished for the sport by reason of augmented wagering.

One writer, an authority when it comes to high class racing, commenting on a report fifteen per cent was to be taken out of pools in an Eastern state, characterized as "debilitating" any more than a ten per cent commission on money handled in the ring. Fortunately the report was not authentic and ten per cent is the official commission in the state referred to.

"Debilitating" is indeed the correct word for any procedure, such as taking out twelve per cent from the pools, that weakens the foundation of the sport. Healthful conditions, above all, must be sought in racing, and such can only be attained by the application of the principles of fair play, such as a reasonably low "take."

Kentucky, Florida, Ohio, West Virginia, and other states have seen the wisdom of not over-taxing the race goer. Is California to be the unenviable exception, discouraging "play" by a high commission in the mutuels? For twelve per cent is a hurdle that thousands of fans refuse. Tourists will flock here as soon as the best of treatment is promised at the race track.

New Yorkers are preparing to make changes that should restore the old time glamor to their sport at Belmont Park and Saratoga. Their racing is in summer. Our program should attract many of them to California in other periods of the year, when racing is not on in their own bailiwick.

The sport is getting a stronger hold on the people all the time. William Woodward, chairman of The Jockey Club, in remarking that racing is necessary as a safety valve for pent-up emotion, is altogether right. Let's have our share of the fun.

SAN MATEO TAXES
REDUCED FOR 1933

The property owning taxpayer of San Mateo county, owning property assessed at $3,000, had a reduction estimated at $36.60 on his county tax bill this year, because of the shift of school costs from the counties of the state, according to a study recently completed by California Taxpayers' Association.

The county schools will receive $541,320 from the state this year, in place of the $613,321 levied last year by the county, according to L. D. Gifford, director of research of the association. The amount which will be received from the state this year is the minimum county requirement under the former law, which, in addition, required that the county allow for a 10 per cent delinquency in collections. If it had not been for the changes in the method of financing schools, the county would have had to levy this $541,320 for general county school support. Of present valuations, and allowing for delinquencies, this would have required a rate of $1.22 per $100 of assessed valuation, in addition to the present levy.

COUNTY COUNCIL TO MEET
SUNDAY IN HALF MOON BAY

The regular monthly meeting of the San Mateo County Council of the American Legion will be held in Half Moon Bay, Sunday morning, January 7, at 11:30, with Coastside American Legion Posts as hosts. There will be a street parade preceding the meeting, starting at 11 A. M. Posts are requested to bring their colors. All Legionnaires are invited to participate. The purposes of the parade is to stimulate Legion interest in Half Moon Bay. The Department Commander and Department Adjutant have promised to be present. The parade will be led by the Redwood City drum corps.

In addition to having a good time at Half Moon Bay next Sunday, there will be considerable important business taken up, and all delegates are urged to be present.

William Gary, proprietor of a roadside cafe on El Camino Real, is recovering from injuries received Sunday morning, when a highwayman entered his place of business, slugged him and escaped with $48 in cash, according to Sheriff James J. McGrath.

AMERICAN HORSE
SOUGHT AS CARD

There is some speculation in Australian papers as to the possibility of the shipment of an American horse or two to the southern hemisphere as a "return" to the visits of Phar Lap and Winooka to this country. The discussion has gone far enough for the suggestion to be made an advance of about five thousand dollars might be made by one of the "down under" racing associations for expenses of the trip.

The Sydney Mail is enthused over the prospect of races at Randwick, Sydney, and at Flemington, Melbourne, in which an American thoroughbred of high class would take part. The sports editor exclaims:

"Imagine what a fillip would be given to racing if a well accredited American horse were entered in features."

There is nothing fairer than reciprocity, and it may not be long before the experiment of shipping American runners to Australia will be attempted. The long shipment from England to Australia of good gallopers is not infrequently made, and already reports are current of plans to send over a good one for the next Melbourne Cup, to be run on the Tuesday in November. The Cup is a ten thousand pound contest and well worth trying for by horses from all countries of the world.

It looks as though England may have a three year old of the class of Hyperion again this season. It will be recalled that Hyperion, a little fellow but fast and game as are so many of the noted Hampton line, won the Epsom Derby and went up to Doncaster to score in the St. Leger. Colombo, champion two year old of last year, is the one expected to turn out to be of exceptional caliber in the classics the coming season. The colt won seven races, with earnings of about $85,000. Colombo was purchased for about $2,500 as a yearling.

"Old Rosebud," who conducts an interesting column in The Blood Horse, a weekly journal devoted to the turf, is of the opinion all men are equal on the turf, as under it. He said recently:

"After all these years, The Jockey Club has come to the newspapers, toward representatives of which it heretofore was so reserved, not to say snooty, for aid in the passage of the

AMAZING PROMISE OF SOVIET MINES

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

With Russia planning to purchase immense quantities of mining machinery in the United States, much attention of daring prospectors and speculators will be focussed on the development of the mineral resources of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, which are of almost fabulous extent. The best of the buying program is that San Francisco, is the headquarters of the mining machinery manufacturing industry. Very direct connection between the mining operations over in Siberia is likely to be established by men of this district not only in supplying the machinery but in the operations themselves.

It is estimated the U. S. S. R. will spend in the neighborhood of $90,000,000 in getting mining going on a large scale. The magnitude of the expenditure itself indicates the proportions of the development of the properties in Siberia, well known to be a continuation of the belt through Canada, will take. Millions of dollars in gold and other metals will be taken out of mines that will be thoroughly equipped.

"Gold," the valuable monthly publication devoted to mining, published in Toronto, tells of the high position of Russia even now in the production of gold. In the next ten years it can be confidently predicted the realm once ruled by the Czars will be pressing Canada and the United States and perhaps Southern Africa in output of the yellow metal. In 1932 Russia was fourth in the list in gold production, with 7.9 per cent. South Africa led with 48 per cent, Canada was second with 12.5 per cent, and the United States (including the Philippines) third with 10.4 per cent.

Over on the eastern slope of the Ural Mountains and in other sections of Siberia the deposits are both vein and alluvial, with gems abounding in the most valuable mines at about 52 North Latitude. Pink topazes and emeralds are found in connection with the gold.

The alluvial deposits are of much interest to the scientist as well as the seeker after gold. Some years ago a well known writer said:

"Some of the alluvial deposits contain traces of pre-historic human work and others contain remains of the mammoth, tichorrhine, rhinoceros, and mammalian fossils."

From whatever point of view the Asiatic territories of the Soviets are considered it must be admitted a marvelous future looms before them. Fortune hunters, possessing the acumen to cultivate the good will of the ruling powers, cannot help but reap rich rewards.

A human note that rings true is struck in a statement by the staff of "Gold" to its supporters in the annual mining review of the publication. I cannot forbear quoting one paragraph, as it is exactly along the lines emphasized in this column since its inception a little less than one year ago. The editors say:

"Frankly, we are more interested in people—in the great human family—than in mineral development simply in terms of dollars. We believe that the national character developed by mining is the great hope for the development of Canada. To develop that character, mining must become the greatest single task of the nation."

It must be added, rounding out of the character of each individual by such an enterprise as mining is not confined to the geographical limits of our Northern neighbor. Under the welcome leadership of President Roosevelt similar character building is going on apace in this country.

Worthy of chronicling is the report from the Bureau of Mines, British Columbia, that in 1933 more than 16,000 Free Miners Certificates were issued, a very large increase over the number granted in other years. Robert Dunn, Deputy Minister of Mines, points out the showing is a practical reflection of the keen interest taken in prospecting for placer gold properties.

Friends of Colonel E. R. Bradley, and they are legion, are hoping he will make it three straight with the renewal of the Kentucky Derby early in May. As usual, the Colonel has several promising colts in training for the race.

Activities of Crocker
Parent-Teacher Association

The thirty-one graduates of Crocker school made a creditable showing in the joint graduation held at Jefferson High, Thursday evening December 21. Mrs. Walker, president of Crocker P. T. A., in behalf of the Unit, had the pleasure and honor of presenting to Patsy Cochran the scholarship prize given to the student making the best grade in the school.

On Friday the entire class of graduates of Crocker school were given a skating party at Iceland Rink. Chaperoned by Mrs. Katch and Mrs. Walker of Crocker P. T. A. they made a most enjoyable affair of the event. After several hours of this healthful, invigorating sport they voted the party a grand success.

Crocker P. T. A. played Santa Claus to the 250 girls and boys of the school, Friday morning, December 22. Bags of caramelized popcorn were distributed by a group of members to the various classrooms.

The magazine luncheon given by Mrs. Abbott, Crocker magazine chairman, at her home, was a huge success. It was the means of securing eighteen new subscriptions to the California Parent-Teachers magazine. As a result of this, Mrs. Burns, District magazine chairman, has planned to be with us and present the program at our next meeting, to be held in General Pershing school, Tuesday afternoon, January 9. Mrs. Garland, District president, will be the honor guest, as also will be several district officers. Members and friends, we urgently ask you to be present and help make this meeting a success.

Mrs. Walker, president of the Crocker Unit, wishes to take this opportunity to wish the editor and staff a happy and prosperous New Year, and to thank them for the many favors and kindnesses received during the past year.

GRAND JURY BEGINS WAR ON BET TAKERS

District Attorney Edmund Scott, acting at the request of the San Mateo county grand jury, last Monday opened war on bookmaking in San Mateo county, issuing an ultimatum to all police authorities of the county to either close up these places or appear themselves before the grand jury.

Bookmaking stands, where bets on races are accepted, are reported to be flourishing in several cities of the county. The grand jury informed the district attorney it had received numerous complaints about bookmaking, especially in the cities.

Following a conference with Sheriff James J. McGrath, the district attorney prepared a letter to chiefs of police and constables of the county, telling them to look over their territory and if they found any bookmaking establishments to close them or come in and tell the grand jury why. Scott said the grand jury had received a list of certain places said to be making books, and these would be checked.

San Mateo county has received its December allotment of school taxes from the state, amounting to $96,448, according to County Treasurer Harry E. Jenkins. High schools have been allotted for the year $334,826; elementary schools, $629,654; and Junior College $108,181. The high and elementary school allotments are being paid in ten installments and the Junior College allotment in two installments, Jenkins announced.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOLS

By Roy W. Cloud, State Executive Secretary California Teachers' Association.

John Swett, a Pioneer Educator
During the immediate years following the adoption of the constitution and the admission of California as a state, beginnings were made in a school system, but they were haphazard and without definite statewide plan or control.

The educational center was in San Francisco. It was to San Francisco, on February 1, 1853, that there came, after 135 days from Boston on the sailing ship Revere, a youth of 22 years not seeking gold, not planning an educational career, but in search of health. That health he found, and in finding it found his life work. That young man, destined to become California's great pioneer apostle of education, who wrought heroically with the crude materials at hand to lay the base blocks and erect the permanent structure of California's free public school system, was John Swett.

Son of a New England school master, John Swett's enduring work for California's educational system began when he was named principal of Rincon School in November of 1853.

The Swetts were a notable New England family line before, during and following the Revolution in many activities from Indian fighting to agriculture, trade and statesmanship. Such was the background of California's John Swett.

The Rincon school was at First and Folsom Streets and, to quote from Swett's Memoir's "to the original shanty there had been attached a shed-like addition for the primary children. There was neither blackboard nor map. The only apparatus consisted of a wooden pail and a battered tin dipper from which the children drank water brought from a well not far distant, the owner of which allowed the boys to draw one bucket of water a day. There was one small table for the teacher and one rickety chair. The school children furnished their own ink bottles, their pens and their paper."

It was in this addition to the Rincon school that this writer's mother went to school in October of 1854. And there is still living, and secretary of the California Society of Pioneers, another of John Swett's pupils of those early Rincon school days: J. H. P. Gedge, now in his ninety-fifth year.

This graphic pen picture presented by Swett of the old Rincon school was a faithful reflex of the schools then in San Francisco with the single exception of the Spring Valley, of somewhat better construction.

The Board of Education, in its report of September, 1854, remarks: "We found the schools, seven in number, with the exception of the Spring Valley, in mere temporary buildings, suitable in no specific respect for school purposes—small, badly constructed, inconvenient, dilapidated and wretched in the extreme. We spared no effort to relieve them, as far as possible, before the rainy season, then near at hand."

As San Francisco was the educational pivot of the State the school picture there faithfully portrays conditions of public education during the early years of the State's development following the hectic and turbulent period of the gold rush.

It was into such a primitive school atmosphere that the young New Hampshire school master came. The pioneering inheritance of his New England forbears found a virgin soil here for a splendidly virile and dynamic mentality. He was cultured, of poetical temperament, warm and human in impulse and in action and with it all, almost paradoxically, his nature was leavened with an invaluable attribute of practicality. He saw the vision ahead and he had the faculty of executive grasp to proceed and make that vision real: to bring California out of an educational gray dawn and into a golden day.

BANK OF AMERICA AGAIN BILLION DOLLAR BANK

With earnings* totaling $9,302,000, or three times the present annual dividend requirement, and with total deposits showing an increase of $76,393,000 for the past twelve months, the Bank of America has maintained the record of consistent progress which has characterized the institution since the Giannini management again took control.

Dividends, which were resumed in June, were paid in the amount of $2,325,000, representing three quarterly disbursements on the capital stocks of the Bank of America N. T. & S. A. and the Bank of America (California). After payment of these dividends, and appropriating $2,390,000 for reserves, $4,587,000 was added to undivided profits, bringing the total of this account as of December 30, 1933, to $15,176,000.

The Bank of America is again a billion dollar bank, the year-end statement shows, with resources of the combined state and national banks totaling $1,005,676,000. Total deposits amounted to $826,051,000 which compared with $749,658,000 at the close of 1932. An increase in cash of $55,818,000 and a $49,130,000 increase in the bank's investment in United States government bonds for the year just past are shown in the report of condition.

Marriages in County Outnumber Divorces

Marriages in San Mateo county during the past year far outnumbered the divorces granted, a check of County Clerk Elmore B. Hinman's records revealed. The county clerk's office issued 708 marriage licenses, while the superior court approved 247 divorce decrees and seven annulments. Civil matters filed in the two courts during the year totaled 1,335, and there were 242 probate petitions recorded.

SYNOPSIS

Disappointed, through her inability to put finishing touches to her costume for a dance, Anne Chamberlain is irritated by the stolidity of her escort, George Hildreth. A visitor in the community, Neal Conrad, young lawyer, is to be the "sensation" of the evening, and Hildreth, Anne's suitor, is vaguely jealous. Conrad is impressed by Anne, readily perceiving her fine character. He invites her to accompany him and his hostess, Mrs. Griffin, on a picnic the following Sunday. Anne accepts, though aware she is being "unconventional." Anne, dipping into scanty savings, buys suitable "finery" for the trip from an old friend, Mr. Goldenburg. The picnic is a red-letter day for Anne. At the end of the day Neal declares his love. Anne has no doubt of her feelings, and they become engaged.

He got up suddenly, and stood with his hands on the back of his chair, facing them.

"Look here," he said abruptly, almost violently. "I've had a long drive, and I'm tired. I'm going to bed. But I'll tell you this much, and then we won't discuss the subject again. I'll continue my usual subscription to this household just as long as you're decent to Anne. Not a second longer. It may not be very aristocratic to bargain, but I notice that none of the rest of you seem to want to work, and I don't believe you want to go hungry. You better think it over."

There was no hint of this battle, however, or of his own victory, when he wrote to Anne.

"Dearest—darling—sweetheart—" it began.

"I can't find any name lovely enough and loving enough to tell you how I feel about you."

"I miss you so terribly that I'm doing everything I can to shorten our separation. I've found a little home for us. It's very small—just a living room, bedroom, bathroom and kitchen, but we could manage in that for this winter, couldn't we? The furniture's rather awful—mission oak in the living room and a brass bed, and so on, but I don't mind if you don't."

"I've been to a stationer's, and asked him to send you some samples of wedding invitations. I thought perhaps it would be easier for me to attend to that than for you. Write me which you like best, and a list of your friends whom you want to invite, and I'll have the cards addressed and sent out from here."

"Do you think you can manage a church wedding? And is there a church parlor or something of the sort in which we could have a reception afterwards? Of course my family and some of my friends will want to come up, and I realize how little room there is in your house? But do just as you think best. I've asked Roy to be my best man. I think that's only fair, considering that he introduced us. My brother Arthur would like to assist in the marriage ceremony, and I should like to have him, if that would be agreeable to your own minister and to you. And of course I want George Hildreth to be one of the ushers."

"I want you to have your ring to wear right away, so I'm going to forgo the joy of putting it on myself. It started to you by express this morning. I know my mother is sending you something, too, with a letter welcoming you into the family."

"I wish I could kiss you tonight, over and over again, as I did that time down by the rosebush, and feel you in my arms. But I will before long. And meanwhile you know that I love you with all my heart and soul, and that I am counting the days that must go by before you are my wife."

"NEAL"

Anne wrote back: "Dearest Neal: The ring came this morning, and fits perfectly. I put it on right away, and have it on now. Of course it's the most beautiful thing I ever saw in my life."

"Your mother's letter came, too, and a lovely brooch which she said had belonged to your great grandmother, and which she had kept for your wife ever since you were a little boy. I put that on, too, though it looks strange with my percale dress. I suppose you've seen it. It's beautiful, too, but of course I like the ring best. I was very much surprised that your mother should give me a present. It was awfully kind of her."

"I've chosen the sample for a wedding invitation that I like best, and I'm sending you a list of my friends' names. I shouldn't have known I ought to do this if you hadn't told me about it. There never has been a wedding in the little church here, but we can have ours there, if you wish. Mr. Hains, our minister, would be pleased to have your brother Arthur take part in the ceremony."

"I think the little flat will be wonderful. I love mission furniture and brass beds."

"What do you think? Mr. and Mrs. Goldenburg have invited me to go to New York with them! Mr. Goldenburg takes a trip every year at this time to buy his fall stock, and he's going to help me make my money go a long way in getting my trousseau. We're leaving Monday, so send your next letter to me at the Waldorf Astoria hotel, New York city. I think we'll be gone a whole week. I simply can't believe it's true. Next to getting engaged to you, it's the most wonderful thing that ever happened to me."

"George feels terribly. He hardly looks at me when I meet him, and he won't speak to me at all. But Roy and his mother have been awfully kind."

"I wish I could write letters like yours. Of course I can't. But just the same, you know how much I love you, and that I'm wishing all the same things that you are wishing, and counting the days, too."

"With a heartfelt love,

"ANNE."

Mr. Goldenburg went through his old stock, and found appropriate wedding raiment for Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain, Sol and Sam. He let them have these on credit, though no one knew better than he the state of Mr. Chamberlain's finances.

After the invitation to go to New York was extended by Mrs. Goldenburg Anne lay awake all night, trembling with excitement; and when they were actually on their way, they all three put their heads together and made a list of her household needs.

"Oh, Mr. Goldenburg, I'll never be able to buy all that with three hundred dollars—you know that's all I have left." "Yes, you will, my dear, you'll see. An' I'm goin' to speak to some of my pizness frens about you. One in de caterin' pizness, he'll send you up a nice little lunch by express, one florist, we'll talk to him about de decorations for de church."

The visit to New York was one of rapture from the beginning to the end of the five days that it lasted. Anne had never been in a hotel before—had never seen an elevator, a menu card, a bell-boy or twin beds; she had never ridden in a subway, or attended a play in a theater. She made mental notes of everything, gleaming fresh bits of knowledge from each new experience. How much this trip was doing to prepare her for the still more wonderful one to Washington with Neal! He was not going to find her ignorant, after all, of all the niceties of life which he knew, as she had feared.

"I'll Continue My Usual Subscription to This Household Just as Long as You Are Decent to Anne."

The Goldenburgs had lost a daughter, Rachel, who would have been just Anne's age if she had lived. Mrs. Goldenburg finally confided this to Anne, her beady eyes brimming, her plump hands twitching; and Anne in turn confided it to Neal when after a three weeks' absence he returned to West Hamstead, and stood amazed at all that had been accomplished while he was gone.

"So they're doing all this for me in her memory! Just think of it."

"I believe they're doing it partly in her memory, but largely because they love and admire you. The Jewish race appreciates qualities like yours. But anyway, I shan't forget. Perhaps I can do them a good turn some day."

"Neal—would you mind very much—do you suppose it would be possible—for me to keep on teaching after we are married? I don't see how my family is going to get along without what I'm earning," she faltered.

Neal did some swift calculating. His contribution to the expenses of his own family had been seventy-five dollars a month, nine hundred dollars a year. If he added this burden of Anne's to his own, they were going to be a good deal straitened in consequence; but that, as he saw it, was what he ought to do. They were in the same boat, as far as their dependents were concerned; and he intended to do the rowing.

"You've been earning ten dollars a week?"

"Yes."

"How many weeks are there in the school year?"

"Thirty-eight."

"Three hundred and eighty dollars—well, we'll manage to find that much some way. Don't you worry."

"You mean you'll send it?"

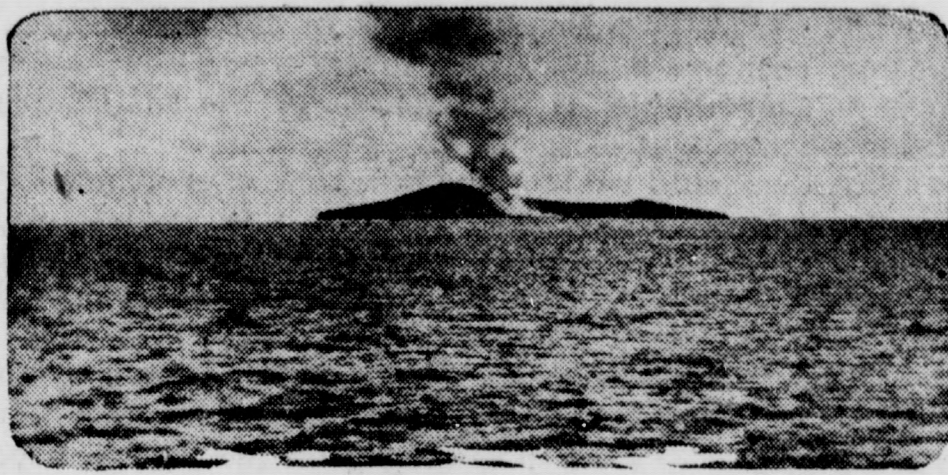

"Of course—why, Anne, darling, don't take it that way—"

For she was crying—shedding glad tears that sprang from a heart overflowing with gratitude and adoration.

"There, there—why, it isn't anything at all—I'll be earning so much a few years from now that I shan't even notice it. Then I'll pay off the mortgage on the farm, and your father can get a fresh start and—now, Anne . . ."

Falcon Island

Steaming Falcon Island.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—U. S. G. Service.

FALCON island, the "island that never stands still," is on the move again according to recent reports. It is doubtful if any land has been built up and cut down so often within the recollection of man as has this island. Located in the southeastern part of the Tonga, or Friendly group of islands in the South Pacific, it has appeared, then disappeared from sight at least twice. In October, 1927, an eruption occurred which raised it high above the level of the sea and brought it to the attention of men the world over.

Since that time newspapers of many countries have published articles concerning its reappearance. Lavas have been reported flowing down its sides and great clouds of ash and steam rising several thousand feet above it.

The location of Falcon island is latitude 20 degrees 19 minutes S. and longitude 175 degrees 25 minutes W. If one could examine a geological map of this general region, he would find that all the volcanic islands lie in a straight line which runs in a north-northeast and south-southwest direction. Beginning with Mount Ruapehu, in North Island, New Zealand, through the Kermadec islands, continuing through Ata (Pylstaart), Honza Tonga, Falcon, Tofua, Kao, Metis, Late, and Fanualai (Amagura), the volcanic islands of Tonga, and terminating in Samoa, this line includes one of the greatest chains of active and dormant volcanoes in the world.

It represents a line of weakness in the earth's crust and along it from time to time molten material is ejected. The world is made aware of these ejections only when the material reaches the surface and forms islands or shoals.

It is very probable, however, that in many places along the line there are submarine volcanoes of whose existence no knowledge has ever been obtained. If one were to predict where the next new island in this part of the world would appear, it would be fairly safe to say somewhere along this line. Practically all the other islands of the region are of nonvolcanic rock, chiefly limestone.

Growth From a Shoal.

The island received its name when H. M. S. Falcon visited the spot in 1865 and reported a shoal. Twelve years later H. M. S. Sappho reported smoke to be issuing from the sea at the same position. In 1885 a submarine volcano burst suddenly into activity and built up a mound which, after a year of intermittent eruption, reached a height of at least 200 feet.

In 1889, H. M. S. Egeria visited the island and Mr. J. J. Lister, an English geologist on board, made some careful observations. He found that during the four years since its formation the action of the sea had removed a large portion of the island, and that only about a third of the original mound remained. He calculated the maximum height of the island at that time to be 153 feet.

Further observations were made by the British admiral in August, 1895. Falcon island extended 800 yards in a northeast-southwest direction and 700 yards in a northwest-southeast direction. It was nearly circular in form and only 40 feet above water.

In July, 1898, it was reported to have disappeared and its site was occupied by a shoal 100 yards in extent on which the sea broke heavily. Thus it took the sea, the rain, and the wind only thirteen years to cause an island with a maximum diameter of about two miles and a height of 200 feet to disappear completely.

There is a popular misconception that islands of this sort disappear by actual sinking. Their disappearance, however, is due solely to the leveling action of the agents of erosion. Two years later, the shoal to which Falcon island had been reduced was showing about 10 feet above the water at the northern end—probably the result of wave action which concentrated the material to leeward. In this condition it was subsequently piled above sea level by the southeast trade winds.

In 1913, H. M. S. Cormoran reported that the island had disappeared once more. Finally the most violent eruption on record occurred in October, 1927. From that time until the present, minor eruptions, separated by periods of quiescence, have added slightly to the size of the mound.

Called "New Place" by Natives.

The native name for Falcon island is Fonua Foo (New Place). It lies about 50 miles to the northwest of Nukualofa, Tongatabu island of the Tonga group. The crater lies on the southeast coast. Its location here is obviously determined by the southeast trade winds, which during and after eruption carry the fine material to the northwest. The waves, driven by these same trades, continue the work and constantly eat into the southeast side, shifting the material to the northwest to build an extensive shoal.

The eastern wall of the crater has the same profile as the western wall, but its summit rises only 200 feet above sea level. On the east it slopes gently to the top of the sea cliff, while on the west it descends more abruptly to the floor of the crater. The bottom of the crater is elliptical in outline and most of its surface is covered by a boiling lake, shaped roughly like a figure eight. The waters in the seaward loop of the figure are a deep, milky green, but in the landward loop they fade to yellowish white. Steam rises from the water and clouds of it drift lazily up the northwest wall. Parts of the lake boil incessantly; other areas bulge upward periodically, bringing black sediment from below.

The crater rim is breached to the southwest, where only a small bit of the original wall remains. This remnant is about 20 feet high and is composed of bedded scoria and ash. On either side of it the storm waves have free access over a low, porous barrier of reworked scoria, through which the lake waters rise and fall with the tide.

The lake is surrounded with ash and sulphur flats, dotted with steam jets, the latter more abundant on the steep western side of the crater than elsewhere. Around the flat is a narrow band of gently sloping land, trenced with V-shaped gullies and grading above into the steep walls of the crater. These are vertically fluted, and in the depressions many steam vents issue. These have deposited quantities of sulphur and other substances, giving the walls a strange appearance. Yellow, orange, or white gullies alternate with the dark ridges.

What the Crater Is Like.

The crater lake and the vividly colored walls are the first impression received while standing on the eastern edge. A closer inspection shows that there are really two craters, a younger one with steep sides lying within an older one.

The crater wall is composed largely of fine ash and scoria, but scattered over its surface are numerous volcanic bombs and blocks of solid lava. Most of the bombs are small, but a few reach a length of more than two feet. They are roughly spindle-shaped and represent masses of lava that were thrown out in liquid condition and solidified while still in the air. Many are exceedingly porous, owing to the escape of inclosed gases; others show a concentric banding made by uniform cooling and contraction. Some of the solid angular blocks of lava exceed three feet in diameter. A few are porous, others dense.

In most places it is impossible to descend the crater walls, because the slopes of the poorly consolidated scoria approach 80 degrees. One may, however, without great difficulty, slip and slide down one of the several steep gullies to the crater floor. Here one unconsciously pauses before proceeding farther.

On all sides are sputtering and whistling steam vents, which issue from walls that are beautifully mottled in many shades of yellow, orange and gray.

It is rather a weird experience to walk out on the delta that separates the two lobes of the lake. The ground is hot beneath the feet, and off the lake comes a withering blast of fetid air. Each steam jet has a hiss, whistle, or sputter of its own. These sounds do not carry far, and as one walks across the flat they quickly replace each other. A low, quietly sputtering vent passes out of hearing and almost between one's feet.

Pumice and fragments of lava lie scattered everywhere. One expects momentarily to break through, yet the ground seems solid enough. The surface of the delta is increased with brilliantly colored sulphurous deposits and tiny balls of greenish sulphur litter the surface below with a line of pumice that marks high-tide level. The waters of the lake near the edge of the delta boil noisily and have a vile taste. The noises, the odors, and the heat oppress the watcher's mind with a feeling of impending activity. It is with a mild sigh of relief that one reaches the top of the crater wall without mishap.

The present Falcon island lies far from steamer lanes. Yet the waves have already washed an odd assortment of foreign objects upon its shores. Wooden boards, bottles, fragments of glass, shells, bits of seaweed, and coral are found mixed with the scoria of the lee shore. Fragments of coconuts are exceedingly abundant.

APPLAUSE

By R. H. WILKINSON

© 1933, Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

WHEN Frank Storey graduated from Maplewood high school and entered Brewster college, he had but one purpose in mind: Football.

Scholastic standing meant nothing. Culture meant nothing. Fraternities meant nothing. Coeds meant nothing. He had but a single vision: To pick up the ball on Brewster's five-yard line and race 95 yards to the opposing goal line, with the roar and applause of 50,000 spectators in his ears. He wanted this more than anything. The roaring applause of the crowds.

Because of these things Frank had a lot to learn.

First, he discovered that he couldn't even play on the football team unless he was up in his studies.

Second, he wouldn't even be considered for the varsity until his second year.

Third, he had a lot of competition—there were some 300 huskies out to make the team, and only about 60 to be chosen.

Fourth, he had to possess unusual strength, skill and ability in order to receive the plaudits of the crowds.

It wasn't like back in Maplewood. There he had been a star. The star. There were only 15 players on the whole team. And during a game, the stands cheered him every time he picked up the ball. The cheers were music to his ears. His inspiration.

But because Frank had his heart set on becoming a big football man, he aimed to overcome the obstacles that stood in his way.

And he succeeded remarkably well. His scholastic standing was low, but it made him eligible for the team.

He spent a long, weary year waiting for his sophomore term to roll around, and then went out to make the team.

The very energy and eagerness he displayed, coupled with a fundamental knowledge of the game, won him a place on the subs.

Frank was proud and reasonably happy, but by no means content.

The first year he wasn't allowed to play in a single game. There were others much better, much more skilled.

He spent hour after hour warming a bench while the great crowds cheered his teammates on to victory.

The second year Coach Prince gave him a chance early in the season.

He was sent out to substitute for a regular in one of the minor games. Brewster was well in the lead when Frank joined the line-up, and he knew that Coach Prince was giving the substitutes a chance to get into a real game, with not much to lose if they blundered.

But Frank didn't care.

He saw the great crowds, felt the old thrill and determined to make the best of his opportunity.

The quarterback gave Frank the ball on the very first play.

He sprinted with it around left end and made a three-yard gain before being tossed. Well satisfied with himself Frank stood up, unconsciously listening for the cheers of the crowd.

But the crowd was silent.

This, to him, wasn't anything to get excited about.

Indeed some of them were already leaving the stands.

Frank felt sick.

He wasn't used to this. He was used to hearing hundreds of spectators bellow his name after such a play.

Here thousands were silent. It unnerved him.

The next play went to him and he fumbled. The opposition recovered, and for the first time in his life Frank heard himself being razzed by an ungracious crowd.

Two more plays and the game ended. Frank walked from the field sick at heart, utterly dejected, low in spirits.

Back in his room he flung himself on his bed and cried. He knew that Coach Prince wouldn't give him another chance that season.

During the winter that followed and the next summer Frank Storey struggled to overcome the thing that had lost him his great opportunity.

Without a thought of giving up, more determined than ever to attain the goal he had aimed at when first coming to college, Frank reported for early training and when the squad trotted out on the field for the first game of the season—his last season—Frank was with them.

He tried not to listen for the acclaim of the crowds.

He tried to sit through the game without having a desire to rush up to Coach Prince and plead for a chance to show what he could do.

The season progressed with Brewster piling up victory after victory. It began to look as if they were going to wind up the season without a single defeat.

And it began to look as if Frank Storey was going to wind up his college football without being given another opportunity to play.

Frank tried to grin and bear it.

And yet he knew that if the season ended without his chance being offered, he'd never finish the college term.

He'd quit, and go to digging ditches somewhere.

Brewster had reached the end of its schedule and was playing its final game, the big game, with Pencost, its greatest rival.

Frank was still on the substitute list. He was moody and morose as he sat there with the other subs, watching the varsity go into action.

And yet, secretly, he wanted Brewster to win. Couldn't help wanting her to win.

But from the start it began to look as if Pencost was going to smash Brewster's record.

They managed to roll up six points in the first quarter and another six in the second.

Both attempts to kick the goal failed. The third period netted neither team a tally, but the Brewster outfit was looking rather sick.

Man after man had either limped or been carried from the field. It looked as if Pencost was out for vengeance.

It was about the middle of the last quarter when Coach Prince called Frank's name.

At first Frank could scarcely believe his ears.

"Listen, Storey," the coach said. "Partridge, who's now playing left half is about shot. I've got to take him out and there's no one else to put in but you. It's your chance. Go to it!" "O. K., coach."

Frank was a little dazed and surprised, but he donned his helmet and went out to relieve Partridge.

Up in the stands the crowd idly noticed the substitution. As far as they were concerned the game was over.

And Brewster was on the tail end. There wasn't a chance.

Many had already begun to crowd toward the exit tunnels. Yet several thousand still remained, more interested in watching the score board behind the goal posts, which flashed at regular intervals the scores of other contests being held all over the nation.

Suddenly a roar broke from the crowd. The score board had flashed the news that Albion Booth had scored a touchdown.

Down in the field Frank Storey had just taken the ball from the quarterback and was sprinting around left end.

He heard the roar of that crowd and thrilled.

At last! He was attracting some attention! They had recognized his genius! They were spurring him on to victory.

Frank's heart pounded joyfully. Grimly he set his teeth. He lowered his head and plunged. Five, 10, 15, 20 yards.

A Pencost man was veering close. Frank's free arm shot out. He heard the dull thud as his opened palm connected.

Then he looked up and his pulse leaped.

The field was clear. He was away! Up the field he plunged, madly, frantically.

Pencost men were at his heels, but they'd never catch him now.

Over he went.

A touchdown!

The roar of the crowd was deafening.

They were still roaring when Captain Armstrong kicked the goal and brought the tally up to 12 to 7, in favor of Pencost.

Frank trotted back down the field. He looked at the crowd and smiled.

He was happy.

He knew that they expected him to push over that winning touchdown. He wanted them to.

They were lined up again. The quarterback was barking the signals.

The ball was going to Frank.

He set his teeth. He heard the crowd roar.

And he knew even before the ball reached his hands, he was going to make it. Nothing would stop him now. Nothing!

And nothing did. Frank was handed the ball in the next three plays, and each time he plunged nearer and nearer the goal line.

The screech of the referee's whistle sounded in his ear just as he passed over the chalk, bringing Brewster to victory.

And this time, as Frank turned and trotted back down the field, he heard them shout his name: "Storey! Storey! Storey! Yeah, Storey!"

Change in Furniture Design

After the execution of Charles I, of England in 1649, the Commonwealth form of government, with Cromwell assuming the protectorate, was responsible for a decided change in furniture design, but it was a short and uncomfortable one, notes a writer in the Detroit News. Anything tending to have the appearance of luxury or ease was discarded as sinful; and Cromwell so hated the aristocracy and the luxury in which they lived that he ordered the furnishings of 19 Jacobean palaces sold. The small amount of furniture made to take its place was as severe as he was in his principles. The backs of the chairs were very low and rigid, allowing no support to the head; there was no carving on the furniture and as little metal as possible was used for locks, hinges and pulls.

Edmonton, Alberta

Edmonton, Alberta, has its roots in the fur trade. Fort Edmonton was built on a high bank on the North Saskatchewan within the limits of the present capital of Alberta, in 1808. Its forerunner, of the same name, was established in 1795 twenty miles farther down the river. George Sutherland of the Hudson's Bay company, who was the chief factor, named the post in deference to his clerk, John Prudens, who came from Edmonton, a suburb of London, England. The first fort was destroyed by Indians in 1807.

AID FOR CRIPPLES

Among the many humanitarian activities which engage the support of benevolent societies and individuals the restoring of crippled children to health and happiness is one of the most commendable.

The work of modern surgeons in this connection is effective almost beyond belief. At a recent convention of the International Society for Crippled Children it was stated that "modern science has healed all manner of diseases, and we are happy to say today that practically every type of malformation, if taken in early childhood, can be cured."

Among the organizations which have given special attention to crippled children, the Shriners have been particularly active, each member of the order contributing regularly to the maintenance of homes for these unfortunate little ones, who would otherwise go through life with deformed bodies and limbs. Other societies are doing a similar service.

A hearty encouragement and support of this labor of love should be extended by every person who is in a position to lend a hand. You can help, even if only in a small way. And it will be an act of which you can be extremely proud.

FARM INCOME HIGHER

Farm crop values for the United States totalled $4,076,000,000 in 1933, an increase of nearly $1,200,000,000 over 1932, according to the Department of Agriculture, whose crop review for the year has just been published.

The amount which farmers received from 1933 crops include approximately $330,000,000, paid by the government in connection with its program for the reduction of cotton, wheat, tobacco and hog production. This expenditure represented considerably more than one-fourth of the total farm income for the year.

Plans for payments to farmers who participate in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration's acreage reduction campaign for 1934 have been worked out, and information regarding the terms under which these plans are to be carried out is being given to producers of the crops concerned in the government's program.

In 1933 cotton farmers were paid for plowing under a portion of the growing crop. In 1934 they will be paid for reducing their acreage before it is planted.

Chinese scientists have taken the pucker out of persimmons, but are still baffled by the grapefruit squirt.

SPEEDERS OF OLD

The traffic problem, especially in our larger cities, has long been acute, and added to the congestion, which appears unavoidable, is the menace of the inattentive driver and the willful speeder.

But we should not imagine that similar problems did not concern city dwellers of the past. In an editorial which appeared in the New York Mirror in the year 1834, the reckless Broadway bus drivers were severely criticized for their disregard of life and limb. It said:

"The inconvenience and danger of this is no less felt by those who ride than by those who walk. It has not only become dangerous to cross Broadway on foot, but persons who venture or trust themselves inside one of these carriages run the risk of having their brains turned by the rapidity of the motion."

Not only was fear expressed for the safety of the pedestrians, but the writer of the editorial appears to have believed that too rapid speed would scramble the very brains inside one's cranium.

What would he have thought of driving an airplane at the rate of more than five miles a minute?

CHANGES IN CONGRESS

During the last year there have been no less than thirteen deaths and nine resignations among members of Congress, a record number of changes from these causes in a similar period.

Members who have died were Senators Walsh of Montana, Howell of Nebraska, Dale of Vermont, and Kendrick of Wyoming; Representatives Garrett and Briggs of Texas, Brand of Georgia, Kemp of Louisiana, Almon of Alabama, Watson of Pennsylvania, Horner of West Virginia, and Clarke and Parker of New York.

Those who resigned were Hull of Tennessee, to become secretary of state; Swanson of Virginia, to become secretary of the navy; Bratton of New Mexico, Ragon of Arkansas and Major of Illinois, to become federal judges; Garner of Texas to become vice-president, Douglas of Arizona to become director of the budget, and Gibson of Vermont, to become a senator.

The year's Congressional death rate of 13 out of 531 members is about double the rate of the general population, which is approximately 11 out of 1,000.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

That the policy of the stores of your home city is not to sell cheap goods, but to sell the best for the least money. The watchword of your local business concerns is service.

Concentration of their efforts has enabled them to offer the merchandise which you require.

They can at all times fill your definite needs and your desires.

They carry merchandise made to sell and to serve—merchandise which will fill every requirement.

Often you find a few merchants who assume that the people of the community know that they are in business and will patronize them.

Live merchants of the home city take nothing for granted. They have a quick turnover of stock and keep their stocks up-to-date and moving rapidly with the aid of local newspaper advertising.

Business concerns of the home city are working to give you definite, dependable service. You should spend the money where you get your money's worth—and that is in your home town, with the merchant who advertises in the local newspaper.

THEATER LIGHTING

An exchange reminds us that theatre programs of some forty years ago frequently carried a note concerning an invention in lighting arrangements, as follows:

"The use in theaters of electric light is experimental. Its brilliancy is of incalculable advantage if it does not prove too intense. It is our duty to give the new light the fairest and fullest trial to reach the highest and best results attainable through experiment."

While this sounds queer to us now, it did require vision and courage on the part of theater owners and others to give the then newly discovered light "a fair trial." Their progressiveness was rewarded, as it deserved to be, and nowhere has the science and art of lighting reached greater heights of perfection than in the theater of today.

Much credit is due to the pioneers who made these amazing developments possible.

TOO MANY SANTAS?

The Christmas season brings to light another grave problem which challenges the attention of any social crusaders who may happen to be out of a job. A clarion call to action is sounded by a Mrs. Washburne, of Illinois, who senses a menace to childhood's blissful contemplation of Santa Claus. She says:

"Consider the plight of the child who goes down town before Christmas. On one corner after another he sees men dressed as Santa Claus. The shock of disillusionment is often bad for him."

In other words, too many Santa Clauses make the kid suspect that none of them are the real thing. What to do? Obviously there should be organized a society for the Suppression of Superfluous Santa Clauses. What?

Jeweler advises that every man carry two watches. But the hold-up man would get them both.

HOPE FOR EPILEPTICS

Another baffling disease which hitherto has been baffling to physicians seems in a fair way to be conquered. Doctors Helmholtz and Haddow, of Rochester, Minn., have made a report of several years of investigation and treatment of epilepsy with most encouraging results.

This report covers the cases of 141 patients treated, of which number forty-three were cured, thirty-two were improved, and sixty-six were not benefited. The treatment consisted of a special diet rich in fats, and was originally worked out by Dr. Russell M. Wilder, formerly of the Mayo clinic.

While the results are by no means uniform, and in some cases were of no benefit to the sufferers, the percentage of patients cured or improved is encouraging. Very little is known about epilepsy, so anything attempted in the way of treatment in the past has been a mere experiment. It now appears that the scientists are on the right track, and the prospect for a complete mastery of the disease is most promising.

RAISED FROM THE DEAD

Barring miracles, the rescue of William Duggan, of Philadelphia, from the embrace of death after being "drowned" and unconscious for nine hours, marks the world's record for literally raising the dead.

As recorded by the press, Dugan passed through all the stages of physical death from drowning, and "when taken from the water his body was blue and chilled, his heart had ceased beating, his pulse was still, and there was no sign of life."

Heroic efforts by doctors, however, finally revived him after nine long hours of seemingly useless labor. When consciousness returned, Dugan quickly revived, and described the sensations experienced as "a peaceful, dreamless sleep; a placid oblivion, devoid of disturbances."

This incident arouses many pertinent speculations. To all intents and purposes, Dugan was physically dead for several hours. Without the persistent efforts of his rescuers he would have remained dead. If his only sensations were those of a "peaceful, dreamless sleep," would there have been an awakening to pains or pleasures of a future state? Or, is oblivion, after all, the end of those who pass on? Every person may supply the answer according to his own belief. But who really knows the correct answer?

Fireworks are generally associated with the Fourth of July, but there may be a fairly impressive display next January, when Congress meets.

SAFE DRIVING RULES FOR INTERSECTIONS

Caution and courtesy are particularly important as safeguards against traffic accidents at intersections, it is emphasized by the public safety department of the California State Automobile Association in a statement discussing the subject of intersection hazards and urging motorists to regulate speed carefully and pay close attention to the rights of other drivers at such points. Failure to reduce speed at intersections and to observe the right of way rules are the direct cause of many accidents, the motorists organization declares. The statement continues:

"Traffic accident records reveal that a heavy proportion of collisions between automobiles occur at intersections, particularly within cities, because one or both of the drivers involved failed to observe certain rules which should be instinctive with every motorist.

"Speed limits and the right of way rules at intersections are clearly defined in the California vehicle act. The law limits speed to fifteen miles per hour at any intersection where the driver's view is obstructed. The law states that a driver's view shall be deemed to be obstructed at any time during the last one hundred feet of his approach to an intersection he does not have a clear and unobstructed view of the intersection itself and of all traffic on streets and highways for a distance of two hundred feet from the intersection.

"Another factor in intersection accidents is the attitude of drivers who, when traveling on arterial streets or highways protected by stop signs, ignore the rights of cross traffic. After stopping at a stop sign and yielding to immediately approaching traffic on the main traveled route, a driver is given the right by law to proceed and other cars approaching the intersection on the through highway must yield to him.

"Proper observance of the speed limit and right of way rules is necessary to protect the motoring public from the ever present hazard of accidents at intersections."

More Jobs, Higher Pay Under Code Approvals

Approval of eight more codes brings the total number that have been signed by the President to 168, of which thirty-five have been during December. A rare exception during the depression has been the domestic freight forwarding industry, which increased employment 55 per cent from 1929 to July, 1933, since which time, under the Blue Eagle, the workers have increased 18.4 per cent, and pay rolls 14.7 per cent. The approved code consolidates these gains.

Under the nonferrous foundry code annual increase in pay rolls of $7,500,000 is anticipated, and about $250,000 under the code of the waxed-paper industry. The number of employees in the refractories industry has been increased 80 per cent since last March, and pay roll increases of 150 per cent. From 40,000 workers in 1929, the set-up box industry had dropped to 29,000 in 1932. Under the code this has been brought up to 35,000, with 20 per cent increase in pay.

WHY GET UP NIGHTS?

Lax the Bladder With Juniper Oil, Buchu, Etc.

Drive out the impurities and excess acids that cause irritation, burning and frequent desire. Juniper oil is pleasant to take in the form of BUKETS, the bladder laxative, also containing Buchu leaves, etc. Works on the bladder similar to castor oil on the bowels. Get a 25c box from any drug store. After four days if not relieved of "getting up nights," go back and get your money. If you are bothered with backache or leg pains caused from bladder disorders, you are bound to feel better after this cleansing and you get your regular sleep. McGraw's Pharmacy says BUKETS is a best seller.

Mrs. Vera Mitchell, of Kansas City, fell 100 feet over a cliff and suffered only a few bruises.

TIRE CHAIN SEASON

Tire chains should be included in the tool kit of every car that is driven to snow areas or over roads in the higher altitudes during winter months, advises the free road service of the California State Automobile Association. In some localities traffic officers will not permit cars to proceed without first installing chains.

NEED FUEL FOOD IN DAILY MEALS

Sugars, Starches and Fats Play an Important Part.

By EDITH M. BAKER

THE foods upon which we depend particularly for fuel and energy are the sugars, starches and fats. These are all comparatively cheap foods and deserve a place in the diet for that reason as well as for their fuel value. They should not, however, hold too large a place, as they may crowd out other foods (proteins and regulating foods) which give us other valuable things besides fuel.

The question is sometimes asked whether it makes any difference which of these fuel foods, sugar, starch, or fat, one eats. As far as providing us with fuel to burn in the body, any one of these foods will replace the others. Fat is a more concentrated form of fuel and gives twice as many calories to the ounce as the starches and sugars. Actually, however, it makes a material difference, as far as our digestion is concerned, which of these foods we eat in large quantities.

Some of each should have its place

2 teaspoons parsley
1 carrot, cooked and chopped fine
Salt and pepper
2 tablespoons fat
2 cups bread cubes
1/4 teaspoon cloves
2 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce
1/2 cup stock

Cook rice and celery. Brown the onion, carrot and parsley in the fat until a delicate brown. Add the rice, celery and seasonings, then the bread cubes. Add sufficient stock to moisten, about one-half cupful, and arrange in the middle of the roast.

Cranberry Brown Betty

1 1/2 cups sugar
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
2 cups bread crumbs
2 cups cranberries
1 cup water
3 tablespoons lemon juice
2 tablespoons lemon rind
1/4 teaspoon salt

Mix sugar, spices and salt. Sprinkle one-half cupful of bread crumbs in greased baking dish. Put a layer of one cupful cranberries over the crumbs. Sprinkle half of the sugar mixture over top. Repeat. Mix water, lemon juice and rind. Pour over bread crumbs. Dot with butter and

Lights of New York By L. L. STEVENSON

Since ships loaded with immigrants no longer race for quarantine to beat quota restrictions, the old turbulent days at Ellis island have vanished. With immigration at its present low ebb, in place of crowding and confusion, there is now more or less prosaic routine. The heartbreak and tragedy so often encountered there in the past are extremely rare now. Occasionally a stowaway, of a higher grade than the usual type of ocean hobo, is caught at the threshold of the New world and causes a bit of sympathy. There are deportees, of course. Being worsted in an encounter with a strange land would suggest tragedy. But as a rule, deportees are stolid and colorless. Some shed tears. But most of them face the future with a shrug of the shoulders or a puff of cigarette smoke.

Sometimes there is tragedy even now, however, tragedy which at first glance may have the appearance of comedy. For instance a recent occurrence—a father chasing two grown sons about an office in the administration building with desks, filing cases and chairs being upset in the pursuit. When the father caught one of the sons, he lashed him with a strap until his face bled. It developed then that the two sons wanted their mother, who was being detained at the island, admitted to the country. The father did not. And the reason why he wanted the mother of his two sons kept out was he is living with another woman.

The father and the two sons were finally placed aboard the ferry that plies between the island and the mainland. At the Battery, the sons appealed to two policemen. They searched the father. But he had thrown the strap into the bay. So the three went their separate ways. Incidentally, the Ellis island ferry, owned and operated by the government, provides the longest free ferry ride in the city. But the man at the gate at the Battery has to be convinced that the would-be passenger actually has business at the immigration station before he stands aside.

Well do I remember one late June day when I went down the bay in a government cutter to meet some one of importance who was returning from Europe and had to be interviewed. So many ships were waiting there that it seemed as if an armada had gathered in the Narrows. In fact, it looked as if a biscuit could be tossed from the deck of one ship to the other. Each ship was loaded with newcomers to America—material for the melting pot. They all passed through Ellis island which at that time was a great mill turning out potential citizens.

Used to watch immigrants also as the liners passed the Goddess of Liberty, wondering the while what their thoughts were concerning that symbol which undoubtedly told them that they were about to attain their goal. I never learned. Some of the newcomers gave the great green statue a glance. Others merely continued their conversation.

NO TROUBLE

"But I can't stand that hall room."
"What's the trouble, sir?"
"Why, every morning I actually have to crack the ice in the water pitcher."
"Oh, don't let that worry you. After this I will send the maid up to crack it for you."

WHEN baking a cake arrange to have nothing else in the oven and place the loaf or the loaves as near the center of the oven as possible. If placed close to the firebox one side of the loaf is apt to burn before sufficiently risen to turn.

Soak iron rust stains in sour milk for 12 hours or longer. Rinse out in cold water. Fresh ink stains can be treated this same way.

To polish steel mix equal parts of sweet oil and turpentine with sufficient emery powder to form a thick cream. Apply with a soft cloth and polish with a leather.

Two-inch cubes of bread can be hollowed out and toasted and used as cases to hold creamed mixtures.

Pennsylvania Freshmen Barred Use of Rouge

Woodpile 103 Miles Long

Bellaire, Mich.—A pile of cordwood owned by the Antrim Iron works is believed the largest in the world. The 50,000 cords, if piled 4 feet deep, would stretch for 103 miles, it was estimated.

Tiniest Phone Company Serves 14 on One Line

Columbus, Ohio.—The smallest telephone company in Ohio, the Shortin' Ridge Telephone Co., of Revenge, Fairfield county, wants to charge its customers $1 a month for service.

An application has been filed with the State Utilities Commission for tariffs for the 14 subscribers who are all on a single line. The company proposed a charge of $1 a month for 35 calls, with 3 cents additional for excess calls.

Organized in April and constructed at a cost of $1,000, the telephone company is now ready to do business. Nine miles of lines and 14 instruments comprise the communication system.

The telephone company was built by Sam F. MacCracken, 82 South Remington road.

Faithful Dog's Vigil Ends

Mountain That Dances Aid to Colorado Town

Durango, Colo.—Carbon mountain, the moving peak four miles from here, put on a dance this year that netted Durango $50,000, according to J. P. Channell, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

Approximately 5,000 persons from 41 states watched the phenomenon during the summer. Channell estimated this tourist trade to be worth about $50,000 to Durango.

Carbon mountain slowly is slipping downward into the Animas river valley. The movement is caused, scientists believe, by the burning of coal veins.

Few tourists were disappointed on their visits to the mountain. It grumbles most of the day and night, and occasionally puts on a spectacular show, pouring forth volumes of sulphuric smoke or releasing an avalanche of rocks into the river valley.

Beavers' Dam Cuts Off Water Supply

Grand Marais, Minn.—When the water supply at the C. C. C. camp near here failed recently, investigation revealed that a newly built beaver dam had cut off the flow. Camp workers destroyed this dam, but the beavers promptly built it up again.

Capt. R. C. Sanders, taking a cue from the persistent animals ordered a man-made dam built by members of the camp so that the water might be piped to the camp from the resulting reservoir. This dam proved less sturdy than the work of the beavers and soon sprung a leak, but the beavers came to the rescue and built nine more dams before the conservation workers had finished their one. The combined effect of all this dam building was to turn the creek into a fair-sized lake.

"Fitz of the Broken Hand"

HISTORY has given to Gen. John C. Fremont the title of "The Pathfinder" and made him famous. But it is strangely silent about the man who once "found the path" for Fremont and who probably knew more obscure corners of the Great West than any other man of his time, not even excepting such worthies as Kit Carson, Jedediah Smith and Jim Bridger.

Thomas Fitzpatrick was his name and he was a young Irishman who came to this country about 1816 and joined the famous Ashley fur trading expedition into the Upper Missouri country in 1823. The next year he accompanied Jedediah Smith on the exploring expedition which discovered the South Pass through the Rockies, that portal through which a flood of emigration to Oregon and California was to pour within the next two decades.

One of the organizers of the Rocky Mountain Fur company, he soon became "chief of the mountain men" and was a leader in the dramatic struggle between rival British and American companies for supremacy in the fur trade. After five years Fitzpatrick's company sold out to John Jacob Astor, for he saw the inevitable decline of that industry.

But his next occupation added to his reputation, for in 1841 he led the first emigrant wagon train to Oregon; in 1843 he guided Fremont on his second expedition to California and back; in 1845 he guided Kearney's dragoons on their expedition to South Pass, Fort Laramie and Bent's Fort, and in the same year he went with Lieutenant Albert on his southwestern survey. The next year he was again Kearney's guide, this time on the famous march of the dragoons to Santa Fe.

After the war with Mexico was over, Fitzpatrick was made agent for the Indians of the Upper Platte and the Arkansas. As a trapper and a trader he had been one of the most skillful Indian fighters on the plains, but because of that fact "Broken Hand" as the Indians called him, had the respect of every redskin in the region. So he made a record as an Indian agent and exercised a control over the red men which has never been equaled, except possibly by that other Irishman of an earlier day, Sir William Johnson, the one white man the Indians of the East ever trusted.

Fitzpatrick's crowning achievement was the great Indian council of 1851 at Fort Laramie at which 10,000 Indians of all tribes forgot for a moment their ancient enmities to smoke the pipe together because "Broken Hand" told them to. He died in 1854, a white-haired and broken man at the age of fifty-five. If he had lived a few years longer there might have been fewer shameful pages in our Indian history.

Big Bat and Little Bat

IN THE post cemetery at Fort Robinson, Neb., among the long rows of little headstones, all of which look exactly alike, is one that bears this inscription: "Baptiste Garnier, Employee Q. M. D." And this marks the end of the trail for a really great frontiersman—a simple slab of granite which records the fact that here lies buried an "employee of the quartermaster's department" and doesn't even spell his name correctly!

For Baptiste (not Baptisto) Garnier was the "Little Bat" of Sioux Indian war days, a scout for our hard-riding, hard-fighting troopers in the seventies, eighties and nineties, a guide for many a party of big game hunters and an interpreter in many an important council—certainly a man who deserved a better memorial than this.

Officers of the old army will tell you that there were two "Bats"—"Big Bat" and "Little Bat"—both of them good men and true. "Big Bat" was Baptiste Poirier, scout for General Crook during the campaign of 1876 and hero of a daring escapade at the Battle of Slim Buttes.

"Little Bat" was the son of a French father and a Sioux Indian mother and he grew up among his mother's people near old Fort Laramie. Valuable as were his services to the whites as a scout during the Sioux war of 1876-77, they were even more valuable as interpreter when Red Cloud's Ogallalas were finally penned up on a reservation and started on "the white man's road" during the eighties. When the Ghost Dance excitement started among the Sioux in 1890, if "Little Bat's" advice that the Indians be left alone until they had "danced themselves out" had been followed, it might have averted some of the tragedies which followed.

One of these tragedies was the Battle of Wounded Knee and there "Little Bat" had one of his narrowest escapes. Acting as interpreter he walked among the lodges of Big Foot's camp, unarmed, to impress the Indians of his conviction that they were in no danger. Then the firing started. In the storm of bullets his clothing was pierced several times, but by some miracle he escaped death.

Eight years later a murderer's bullet accomplished what those fired in battle could not do. For "Little Bat" was shot down in Crawford, Neb., by a barkeeper whom he had regarded as his friend and who was never punished for the cold-blooded murder of a man noted for his peaceable disposition, as well as for his stark courage in time of danger.

AMERICAN ANIMALS

ARMADILLO

THIS chap is very strange appearing;
His eyes are poor, he's hard of hearing.
From Texas southward he is found,
And lives in burrows underground.

And if you saw an armadillo
You wouldn't want him for a pillow.
His bony shell is hard and tough;
The over-lapping plates are rough;

He catches insects large and small,
But hasn't any teeth at all,
He licks them up with sticky tongue,
And doesn't mind if he gets stung!

He pokes his nose in prickly thickets
To look for beetles, ants and crickets;
This funny creature even feeds
On spiders, worms and centipedes!

on the menu of any person in good health. Too much sugar should be avoided, as it may cause a fermentation which upsets digestion. Sugar should not be put into the baby's diet, except in the natural form in milk and in fruit juice. Preferably, it should not be served on the cereal for children, who will like it just as well without the sweetness.

Children should be given candy only after meals, when it will be diluted by the other food and will not be as irritating to the lining of the digestive tract as it is in concentrated form. It is wise to let a child fill the sweet tooth with sweet dried fruits, such as dates, raisins and figs, with marmalades and honey served between slices of bread, rather than with candy.

Too much fat in the diet should be avoided also. It takes fat longer to go through the digestive tract than it does the other foods. The heat of the body liquefies the fat and it coats the other particles of food which cannot be reached by the digestive juices until the fat has been partly digested. Some children and some older persons seem to have a low tolerance for fat. Usually, however, it should have a place in the whole milk and as butter on bread for children. For older persons it may be used in cooking in the usual ways.

Fats, butter, margarine, lard, salad oils and other fats are almost alike in their food value. Butter has a vitamin A content which the other foods lack unless as is the case with at least one margarine, it has been added to the natural fat. Unless a quart of whole milk is a certain quantity in the child's diet, this A content of the fat used for the young child is a matter of importance.

Starches, which are used in the form of breads and cereals, are the fuel foods which usually figure largely in a liberal diet. They are digested easily by normal persons. For young children they should be in a crisp or thoroughly cooked porridge form.

The crisp cereal and bread in the form of toast, or hard, dried cereal, will give a child a chance to develop its gums and teeth.

To sum up the question of fuel foods—a varied diet with a proportion of sugar—preferably in its natural form—starch and fat will give the best nutritional results.

52,000 Moles Costly

Alma, Wis.—County commissioners here paid $5,250 in bounties for moles during the past five months. At 10 cents a mole, this means that 52,500 of the tiny animals were killed. The commissioners have voted to abolish the mole bounty.

PECULIAR ACCIDENTS

Some interesting facts concerning freakish accidents are related in Popular Science Monthly, illustrating Voltaire's saying that "it is the danger least expected that soonest comes to us." Among others he relates the following:

P. Wiggins, Kansas aviator, was bitten by a rattlesnake that had somehow gotten into his plane, while flying at an altitude of about a mile, but landed and obtained treatment in time to save his life.

Caesar Beltram, of Lyons, France, was struck by lightning five times during his lifetime, yet finally died of pneumonia.

Some years ago General Castilliano, a Nicaraguan revolutionist, was struck by a falling meteor while sitting in his tent one night and was killed. His superstitious soldiers believed that the Almighty had thus shown disapproval of their cause, so they abandoned the revolution.

Mathematicians have figured that an American will be struck by a meteor about once every 9,300 years, on an average. They will also calculate that a person living to the age of 70 has one chance in 7,000 of being struck by lightning.

About 1,000 persons are injured in bathtubs to every one hurt in railroad accidents. About 30,000 Americans are killed every year by accidents occurring in and about their homes, about as many as are killed by automobiles.

Most ironical of the accidents enumerated by our writer was that in which a man was painfully injured by the falling of a horseshoe he had nailed over his door for luck. And that would seem to us to be hard luck.

DOUBTS ABOUT NOAH

Many of the important personages of history have been shorn of much of their supposed greatness by modern historians and near-historians. It was inevitable that old Father Noah should get his debunking in due time, and so it has happened.

Dr. C. Leonard Woolley, noted archeologist and field director of the joint expedition of the University of Pennsylvania and British Museum of Mesopotamia, is the debunker. He declares that excavations along the Euphrates river show that the flood of Noah's time, mentioned in the Bible, was only a local condition, and that many of the inhabitants of the region escaped to safety in the hills.

The presence of Noah at the scene is also doubted by Dr. Woolley, who places the date of the flood at about 4000 B. C., while the Jews first came to Mesopotamia some 2,000 years later. The archeologist believes that the Jews heard the legend of Noah, the ark and the dove from the Assyrians and adopted it as their own. In support of this view he pointed to Assyrian tablets which portray the story. Anyway, 6,000 years is a long time back, and while most archeologists agree that the popular idea of the flood is greatly exaggerated, it is doubtful whether we shall ever know just what happened around the Euphrates valley in that distant day.

HERE'S SOMETHING FOR ALL OF US

Figures published in Railroad Data for September 8, contain information that should cheer millions of people. Net railway operating income was shown to be $216,704,345 in the first seven months of 1933, as compared with $120,900,560 for the same period in 1932. This was a return of 1.64 per cent on the properties, instead of 0.91 per cent in 1932.

While the return so far this year is far below any reasonable figure, the fact that it is more than 50 per cent above last year is an encouraging sign.

Just think what it would mean to this country if the railroads were placed in a position where they could earn a "fair return." Hundreds of thousands of new jobs would be created on railroads, and in other industries which furnish hundreds of millions of dollars worth of supplies annually to our transportation systems.

Every citizen in the United States has a very definite interest in railroad prosperity, for it affects the earning power and pocketbook of each of us.

It is said that in early times American Indians never kissed. And they never made up, either, except with war paint.

Some bright organizer ought to form a national Second Guessers Association, composed of persons who said that the Eighteenth Amendment would never be repealed.

Then there was the absent-minded young doctor who billed his sweetheart for two dollars a visit.

A POLITE SUGGESTION

The gallantry of an old-time Western reporter is recounted in a story which recently reappeared in several publications. It concerns the late great actress, Sara Bernhardt, and the late Sam Davis of the Carson City Appeal.

Mme. Bernhardt and her company were playing in the West, when Davis was requested by the San Francisco Examiner to meet her in Reno and accompany her to the then metropolis of California, and he did so. After several days of acquaintance, during which Davis naturally showed the actress every attention, the time came to part, whereupon "the divine Sara" expressed her appreciation of his kindness by kissing him on either cheek, and then on the mouth, saying: "The right cheek for the Appeal, the left for the Examiner, the lips for yourself."

Nothing daunted, Davis made the polite suggestion: "Madam, I also represent the Associated Press, which serves 380 papers West of the Mississippi river."

Whether he received the additional expressions of appreciation to which he appeared to be entitled, the story does not state.

NEW BODIES FOR OLD

If you weigh yourself today, and then weigh yourself three weeks from now, your weight will probably show little change. But, according to Dr. Adolph of the University of Rochester, at least 93 per cent of the real substance of your body will have been changed in the meantime. For, he asserts, the water content of a human body changes every twenty-one days, on an average, and the body is 93 per cent water. He also figures that the nitrogen of the body, which is the chief element in the chemical composition of muscle, is renewed every 290 days, while the iron component is changed in a slightly longer period.

It used to be thought that the actual substance of one's body was completely changed about every seven years, but Dr. Adolph's researches indicate that the time of renewal is much less than that.

So, when you look in your mirror you may see what appears to be the same object you saw there a year or two before. But the real substance will be almost entirely different, and the change will generally be for the worse, rather than for the better.

RIVERSIDE'S BELLS

The largest carillon in the world is in the tower of the four million dollar Riverside church in New York City. It has seventy-two bells with a range of six octaves, the largest bell weighing twenty tons. The carillon tower is 360 feet high, into which the bells were hoisted by electricity, using steel cables.

Three bells in the world are larger than the big bass bell of the carillon, but it has the deepest tone. It is about eight feet high, its clapper alone weighing as much as the Liberty Bell, about a ton.

The tower and carillon are the gift of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. He and his father are the largest contributors to the new church, of which Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is the pastor. Riverside church, with its great carillon, is a recent notable addition to the many fine religious edifices of the nation's metropolis.

TIRE INFLATION

Tests recently made indicate that by keeping automobile tires inflated at the standard gauge recommended by the manufacturers from 25 to 30 per cent more mileage may be obtained. Soft tires not only wear out quicker, but they damage the highway by their suction, which picks up the road surface.

Jamming on brakes unnecessarily is also a cause of tire waste, as the treads are thereby ground into the road. A survey for road-builders in the state of New York is said to have shown that on main-traveled roads the surface would assay about 8 per cent rubber after a few years of use. Frequent testing of tire pressure takes little time, and proper inflation saves both tires and roadways.

Girl babies are hard to get to sleep, says a nurse. Yeah, especially when they are between 16 and 60.

CONSERVATION CORPS MEN
TO RECEIVE EDUCATION

An educational program for the 300,000 men in the Civilian Conservation Corps, which has been approved by the President, is now in effect. One educational adviser is being placed in each of the 1466 forest work camps. General and vocational subjects will be offered and a chance given each worker to improve his education.

Pointing out that a great number of the young men in the forest corps had but a meager education, Robert Fechner, director of the Emergency Conservation Work, stated that forestry and agriculture would also be taught with a view to assisting many of them to become adjusted to a new mode of living—to country instead of the city life.

For government departments—Interior, War, Labor and Agriculture—are co-operating in establishing and operating the new educational system. The Interior Department, through the Office of Education of which Dr. G. F. Zook is Commissioner, is preparing the general program of instruction, appointing the camp educational advisers, and recommending to the War Department the outlines of teaching procedures, and types of teaching materials for use in the camps. The program will be executed under the immediate direction of the War Department.

BOAT OFFICER ELECTROCUTED
WHEN AUTO STRIKES POLE

Although no serious traffic accidents were reported in San Mateo county as the New Year opened, a San Francisco ferryboat officer was electrocuted in Redwood City following an automobile crash, to bring the 1933 death toll to 67, a check of police and hospital records showed.

The victim of the Redwood City fatality was Claude B. Connolly, 35, assistant engineer on a Southern Pacific-Golden Gate ferry steamer. The automobile he was driving skidded on the wet pavement at Whipple avenue and El Camino Real, sidwiped a tree and then struck a telegraph pole. The pole was cut off at its base and brought down wires.

Apparently not badly hurt, Connolly opened the car door, stepped into a tangle of live wires and was killed instantly.

WOMEN'S EIGHT HOUR
LAW STILL IN FORCE

State Labor Commissioner Frank C. MacDonald states that recently he has been compelled to deal with cases against several employers for violation of the California Women's eight hour law. Some employers claimed that they believed they had a lawful right to work women more than eight hours a day because they had signed the President's Re-employment Agreement, and others claimed that they believed they were exempt from the eight hour law because they had signed codes. Labor Commissioner MacDonald states that neither Federal Codes or the President's Re-employment Agreement in any way abrogates, modifies or suspends the California Women's eight hour law which provides in part that:

"No female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment or industry, laundry, hotel, public lodging house, apartment house, hospital, barber shop, place of amusement, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or in the operation of elevators in office buildings, or by any express or transportation company in this state, more than eight hours during any one day of twenty-four hours, or more than forty-eight hours in one week.

"Every employer, or manager, superintendent, agent or officer thereof, employing any female, who violates or omits to comply with any of the provisions of this act, or who employs or suffers or permits any female to work in violation thereof, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished, for a first offense, by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars; for a second or subsequent offense, by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred and fifty dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

MacDonald further states that the California Women's eight hour law has been upheld and sustained in a test case before the Supreme Court of the United States, and that consequently all employers are prohibited by the California law from employing women workers more than eight hours in any one calendar day.
